

Press Contact
Tim Keaney
Assistingu.com
(805) 306-0024

For immediate Release

Assistingu.com launches “Campaign Campaign”

Assistingu.com launches program to help political candidates take campaigns to the Internet

August 30, 2002 (Simi Valley, CA) Assistingu.com, a fast growing provider of Internet Solutions for small business announced today the launch of its “Campaign Campaign”, designed to help candidates for public office save time and money getting their message out by taking their campaigns to the Internet.

The program is a series of web site templates that candidates can choose from to post their campaign themes, issue positions, biographies, pictures, endorsements and other tools of the political trade. Candidates will choose a template that best projects the image they want to convey to potential constituents, then provide Assistingu.com with the words and pictures that will make up the site’s content.

“The Internet has changed the way many candidates run for office”, states Debbie Keaney, Owner of Assistingu.com. “While candidates for local office will always have to get out there, press the flesh, walk neighborhoods and have signs etc...The Internet provides them a tool to really explain where they’re coming from on the issues, give their qualifications, or show an endorsement list; All the stuff you don’t have time to do at someone’s door. National and statewide candidates have used web sites for years, and now we can help local candidates do the same.” Keaney said.

Assistingu.com has already built campaign web sites for candidates and issues in the San Fernando Valley secession race, including www.biggsforcouncil.com and www.mcalpineforcouncil.com. One page sites plus campaign email start at $299.00. Assistingu.com will also help candidates select and procure promotional items to help advertise candidate sites. Interested candidates can find out more about Assistingu.com by visiting their web site, www.assistingu.com or by calling (877) 233-7007.